USAWC Strategy Conference: Reintegrating Veterans into American Society

What are the physical, mental, and economic impacts on members of the U.S. military profession as they return to society? What are the policy implications of these impacts?

Panelists David Lyle, of the Office of Economic and Manpower Analysis, George Rutherford, of the University of California and Joseph Sabia, of the U.S. Military Academy, will discuss this topic during the U.S. Army War College's XXII Annual Strategy Conference, April 5-7 at Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania.

The is just one of the panels that will be held during the conference, designed to address the role of the military, the potential divergence of military professional values from those of the society from which it derives, the challenges America faces in providing qualified new entrants into the military profession, and the reintegration of departing members of the profession back into larger society.

Guest speakers include Greg Mortenson, author of "Three Cups of Tea," and Gen. Martin E. Dempsey, TRADOC commander. The conference co-directors, Dr. Lenny Wong and Prof. Trey Braun of the Strategic Studies Institute, will lead a group of distinguished scholars in examining this timely and relevant subject.
