

Provost to retire, expected to trigger nationwide search

USAWC Provost to retire, triggers nationwide search

July 25, 2016 -- USAWC Commandant Maj. Gen. Bill Rapp announced today that Dr. Lance Betros, Army War College Provost, will retire as of December 2016.

"As the first provost of the U.S. Army War College, Dr. Lance Betros proved absolutely superb in synchronizing the work of the many elements of the War College into an integrated whole," said Rapp. "He will leave knowing that he made the Army War College a much better place.

"His work has left a legacy of excellence for us all -- on faculty credentialing, design of both leader-development and idea-developments lines of effort here, and institutionalizing the process for Integrated Research Projects, among many investments in Army War College academic excellence," added Rapp.

To maintain the trajectory of his work here, we will soon appoint a search committee to interview candidates to fill the provost position. The announcement for the position of Provost, US Army War College, will appear on USA Jobs within days.