

USAWC Strategy Conference: America's Society and its Military Profession

USAWC Strategy Conference: America's Society and its Military Profession

The relationship between American society and the military profession has evolved over time. Now, a decade after September 11, 2001, triggered the nation's protracted war, the Army War College is leading an examination of the military-society relationship and values.

Greg Mortenson will share his thoughts about non-military engagements, through education and literacy programs in remote mountain regions of Pakistan and Afghanistan.

Lt. Gen. John E. Sterling Jr, Deputy Commanding General/Chief of Staff, TRADOC, will close the conference with his insights about the Army-wide initiative to refine the understanding of what it means to be in the Profession of Arms.

Key topics of the conference will be --

- o America's society and the military profession
- o the media perspective on the military and society
- o the role of faith in the US military and in American society
- o the roles of Military families, spanning the military community and the American society
- o Military leaders call for investing in America's youth
- o Physical, mental, economic impacts of veterans re-integrating into our American society

o Expectations: do Americans look to the US military for more than fighting wars ... border security, diplomacy, humanitarian mission?

Registration deadline is April 3. Visit <http://www.strategicstudiesinstitute.army.mil/conf>, to register, view the full agenda, and other admin information.

U.S. Army War College Archives - News Article - 11 February 2011