

IMCOM commander visits installation

Photos by Staff Sgt. Corey Baltos, USAWC Public Affairs

IMCOM commander visits installation

Lt. Col. Mark Viney, the commander of the Army Heritage and Education Center, shows Lt. Gen. Rick Lynch, IMCOM commander, plans for future expansion of AHEC. AHEC's Visitor and Education Center is scheduled to open at the end of April. This was Lynch's first visit to AHEC.

Bob Suskie, the director of the Carlisle Barracks Department of Emergency Services, points out a crack in the floor of the Carlisle Barracks fire station to Lt. Gen. Rick Lynch, IMCOM commander. The crack makes the floor unstable, and therefore the Carlisle Barracks fire department is unable to park their vehicles in the station.

Lt. Gen. Rick, Lynch, IMCOM commander, walks to student housing during a tour of Carlisle Barracks on March 29. Lynch commended Carlisle Barracks for its ability to improve and grow the facilities without a large expenditure of money. Lynch, who spoke to both the students and the garrison staff, reminded them of the importance of taking time for self and family.

Lt. Gen. Rick Lynch, IMCOM commander, congratulates George Fritz for his 40 years of service to the nation, before speaking to Carlisle Barracks garrison staff about changes coming down the pike. Lynch told the assembled audience that even though the nation would most likely remain at war for the next ten years, the Army's budget would get increasingly smaller. These cuts would most likely effect the civilian work force, which is currently over strength by 10,000, and government contractors.

U.S. Army War College Archives - News Article - 30 March 2011