

Garrison command team welcomes class into their new homes

Staff Sgt. Corey Baltos, USAWC public affairs

Garrison command team welcomes class into their new homes

The Garrison command team along with Bif Coyle, the resident chief housing officer, inspect a kitchen as part of their effort to ensure that the homes are up to standard.

As part of their on-going effort to provide quality service to the residents of Carlisle Barracks, the Garrison command team inspects every recently vacated home on post, to make sure it meets their personal standard of cleanliness. If it meets the standard, the command team will sign off that the house is ready to be occupied by a new family. If it doesn't meet the standard, it is re-cleaned until it does.

But the attention doesn't stop there. Once the students move in to their new quarters, a member of the command team visits them to make sure that they are happy with their new home and to inquire if there are any problems or concerns they would like addressed.

Command Sgt. Maj. Robert Blakey inspects a stove as part of the garrison command team's commitment to providing quality homes to residents.

Lt. Col. William McDonough, garrison commander, greets Lt. Col. George Hanhauser, student, outside his home at Young Hall. After ensuring that the houses were acceptable for the new students to move into, a member of the garrison command team met with the students individually to introduce themselves and inquire if there are any concerns or issues that need addressing.

U.S. Army War College Archives - News Article -
04 August 2011

