Scholar and author Dr. Jack Jarmon will give a presentation, with question-and-answer period, about "The New Era in U.S. National Security: Changing Technological Patterns of Geopolitical and Economic Competition from the Industrial Age to the Information Age." Jarmon will guide the audience from Cold War politics -- through the past decade of asymmetric warfare and technology's impact on institutions and policy makers -- to a discussion of cyber warfare and the crime-terrorist nexus. The event is free and open to the public, Wednesday, Aug. 20 at 7:15 p.m. at the Army Heritage and Education Center. Visit www.usahec.org or call 717.245.3972 for your questions.

Dr. Jack Jarmon has taught international relations at the University of Pennsylvania, the John C. Whitehead School of Diplomacy, at Seton Hall University, and Rutgers University, where he was also Associate Director of the Command, Control, and Interoperability Center for Advanced Data. He served as the USAID technical advisor for the Russian government in the mid-1990s. His private sector career includes global consultant firms, technology companies, financial institutions, and was the Director of Strategic Alliances at Nortel Networks, Brampton, Ontario. Book signing will follow for his book, The New Era in U.S. National Security: Introduction to Emerging Threats and Challenges.

Perspectives in Military History is a monthly public lectures series, sponsored by the US Army Heritage and Education Center, to provide to the US Army and the American public a historical dimension to the exercise of generalship, strategic leadership, and the warfighting institutions of landpower.
