March 24, 2009 – Army War College students heard first-hand the issues and challenges facing not only the Air Force, but the entire Department of Defense during a talk by Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Norton Schwartz, March 24 in Bliss Hall.

"The art and science of national defense is very important," he said. "The proper application of the elements of national power is important, and that's what you're learning here. You time here will have meaningful strategic results."

Schwartz spoke about the importance of stewardship and the responsibility that the armed forces have to the American public.

"It doesn't matter what uniform you wear, we all serve collectively. We serve the people of the United States. We serve those around us. We must never forget this."
