Formally established on June 19, 1992, the Center for Strategic Leadership represents the vision of three Chiefs of Staff of the Army. Generals Carl Vuono, Gordon Sullivan and Dennis Reimer all played a part in CSL's creation.

CSL's faculty and staff focus on strategic decision making, communications, research and the experiential education of strategic leaders. They contribute to the Army War College's resident education program through their support of the core and elective courses, strategic wargaming and advising on strategy research projects.

Collins Hall was completed and dedicated in July, 1994. The building is named for Gen. J. Lawton Collins, whose personal efforts lead to the reopening of the Army War College in 1950.

Collins Hall provides the Army War College with a multi-faceted 155,000-square foot learning center, laboratory, wargaming center and conference facility. It is optimized for wargames and exercises.
