Carlisle Barracks cemetery closure

The U.S. Army has scheduled an archeological team to remove the human remains of three Native American children from the Carlisle Barracks Cemetery and enable their families to return them home to Wyoming, in a project scheduled to begin here August 8. The Army National Military Cemeteries will manage the disinterments, in response to requests from families of the three children.

As a result, the Carlisle Barracks Cemetery will be closed to visitors starting July 31 until disinterment activities complete. Please respect Native Americans' privacy during this time.
