

Carlisle Barracks launches new home page

By Thomas Zimmerman 22 October 2018

RELATED LINKS

Carlisle Barracks Home

U.S. Army Garrison Carlisle Barracks went live this week with an innovative, user-friendly new website and community members are invited to take the first look.

The new website is the result of a migration of all U.S. Army Installation Management Command garrisons to a combined content management system for their public-facing websites. The result is a unified public web presence for the IMCOM enterprise with standardization across installations as far as the look, feel and organization of the websites.

Some of the features of the new website include a localized newsfeed, a listing of garrison programs and services along with contact information and hours of operation, information and links for newcomers and much more.

The site has several different options for searching for content. Garrison employees, who may be familiar with searching for programs based on which directorate they fall under, may access a list of programs and services through a menu of the different directorates. Community members who don't work for the garrison can look for content by visiting user-specific menus such as the For Newcomers, For Soldiers and For Families menus, or they can visit the All Services menu and find an A to Z listing of garrison programs and services. If all else fails, the website features a search function for finding information quickly.

To visit the new website, go to <https://home.army.mil/carlisle/>

U.S. Army War College News Archives