

Innovation Marketplace opens: Forum for exchange of problems, questions and expertise

By Public Affairs Staff 05 May 2020

*The Innovation Marketplace is open - tap into this exchange by entering your issue, concern, question or project for which Army War College teams or individuals may be able to help:
www.armywarcollege.edu/InnovationMarketplace/#/*

The Innovation Marketplace is a forum for the free exchange of ideas, problems, questions, and expertise.

Enter the Army War College Innovation Marketplace.

The Army War College introduces the Innovation Marketplace in recognition of our ability and our responsibility to fully participate our regional community and communities of shared interests. We are proposing to contribute to idea development, problem-scoping, analysis, problem-solving, project development for a host of possible issues.

Among the issues and questions we hope to help with are non-medical strategizing and planning associated with recovery from the current COVID-19 international health emergency.

“We’re starting with issues and questions related to COVID-19 planning and recovery,” said USAWC Commandant Maj. Gen. John Kem. “If you need COVID-related help, the Army War College class of 2020 is available for another month or so.

“In the long run, we’ll take ideas and questions more broadly. If we have capability and capacity, we are a strategic research resource and we want to help,” said Kem.

The Marketplace is open to anyone who wishes to tap into the expertise resident in the USAWC community – connecting others with our community of expertise.

The Marketplace may link your issue with expertise in any of the disciplines core to the US Army War College: leadership, creative and critical problem-solving, analysis, logistics, enterprise management, long-range planning and national security issues. We can view problems thru three lenses: past, present, future, applying a range of analytical tools.